A rich and awesome read. Maynard Solomon writes about Leopold's drive to make his son great, and even about Leopold's own jealousy toward him.

"Mozart: A Life in Letters," edited by Cliff Eisen

He was not only a musical genius, but also a really funny dude. There are plenty poop jokes to go around, but also accounts about his traveling days, his illnesses, his companions – and, especially, how he loved music.

Podcasts:

"A History of Mozart in a Dozen Objects," Eisen on BBC Radio3.

One of the coolest podcast you'll listening to, period. A history of Mozart's time, using his watch, his fortepiano, an executioner's sword and a blood-letting device – among other things – to tell the story.

Recordings

One I grew up with – another is a more modern, but historically informed.

Arthur Grumiaux: "Mozart Violin Concertos"; Sir Colin Davis/London Symphony Orchestra, Raymond Leppard/New Philharmonia Orchestra (Philips)

I grew up listening to these concertos incessantly. I couldn't stop. I played that record until the grooves on the vinyl were so worn out the Third Concerto side would stop playing the first movement.

Giuliano Carmignola: "Mozart: Violin Concertos/Sinfonia Concertante"; Claudio Abbado/Orchestra Mozart (Arkiv)

These period- and modern-instrument hybrid renditions by Carmignola and Abbado are sonic gold. Every single movement from these concertos has a fresh take.

This movie focuses on Nannerl, Mozart's older sister, perhaps equally talented but stunted artistically by their father, Leopold. The unfair treatment of Nannerl is heartbreaking and poignant.

Books:

"1791, Mozart's Last Year"

Mozart's death has always been a mystery, making H.C. Robbins Landon's thought-provoking and mesmerizing book a must for all Mozart fanatics.
